KEEP THE BICYCLE BELLS!

The Bicycle Police Likely to Be Bothered by the Decision That Bells Are Not Legally Required. To THE EDITOR OF THE SUN-Sir: The question: "To give warning by bell, whistle or otherwise," as decided by a Magistrate, certainly does not give the bicycle squad encouragement to maintain order upon the highways of a great city to the mutual benefit of the general public and riders alike. It has a tendency to hamper the bicycle squad in preventing accidents and at times serious accidents.

It has been a general custom and I may say an accepted custom; a signal by bell that is understood by every one "accustomed to driving, riding a wheel or directing any other vehicle, according to the rules bell with judgment; does not abuse the object Second Race—the mile—Weldeman, 100. A new bill will also be introduced providing for the construction and protection of speedways throughout the State. President Kane voiced the sentiment of the association and horsemen generally when he stated that not only would the bill ruin the great drive for the purpose for which $3,000,000 were expended, but that thousands of New York's citizens would be deprived of the pleasure of seeing the horses brush, and that the fight against such a bill could not be made too strong.

The committee having in charge the matter of an entrance to Central Park at Fifty-ninth street and Seventh avenue was instructed to wait upon President Clausen of the Park Board on his reutrn to the city next Tuesday, and put the question before him. Brivers find it almost impossible to get into the Park at the Circle, and driving that way is attended by considerable danger. Fred Girken and Thomas J. Byrnes were added to the committee.

Falls in Two Minutes of Actual Work. New York sporting men received a chance last night to size up the latest wrestling importation, Nouroulah, who is the biggest of his kind that has ever visited America from the Sultan's country. Nouroulah tackled James McWeeney, a Chicago policeman athlete and football player, at the Grand Central Palace in the presence of about 3,000 spectators and won with ridiculous ease. The Turk was not put to a severe test, consequently he did not convince the crowd that he could wrestle in accordance with the rules of science, though he did display unusual strength. From McWeeney's actions it appeared, so far as wrestling is concerned, he was no better than a novice and an easy mark. Nouroulah might find a troublesome opponent in Paul Pons, the Frenchman, but against men 100 pounds lighter than himself he it almost sure to have an immense ad-

When he shook hands with the Chicago man the latter looked up at him in wonderment. It was agreed that the men should wrestle catch as catch can in the first bout and Greco-Roman in the second. If heather secured a fair miside of one hour, there would be a rest of ten mantes, after which the match would proceed. If either contestant was thrown or feil out of the ring he had to come back and wrestle or lose the match. Though the mat used was several sizes too small to cover the entire surface off the Chicagoan to get his hands upon the giant's body, so he adopted ether tactics. He tried to grab the Turk around the head, but Nouroulah stiffened his neck and there was nothing doing. The Turk stuck out his right hand and caught hold of McWeeney's left arm. McWeeney tugged away to get loose, but the giant's grip was of iron. Then suddenly McWeeney, with a quick movement of his right foot, tripped the Turk up. The letter lost his balance and fell to the mat. The crowd believing that the Turk was about to be thrown, stood up and yelled. But McWeeney had lost his balance, too, and was prone on the mat beside his powerful antagonist.
